

THE POWER OF THE ALASKA NATIVE VOTE

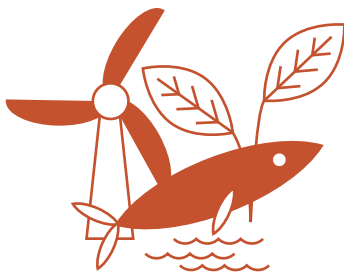

INDIGENOUS FUTURES SURVEY

Native peoples make up almost a quarter of Alaska's population, the highest of any state in the U.S. With the 2024 election right around the corner, we have the power to advocate for more policies that support our people.

National Survey Shows What Alaska Native Voters Care About Most

The Indigenous Futures Survey is the largest nationally representative survey led by Native peoples, for Native peoples. 2023 survey responses from Native peoples living in Alaska identified the following priorities that will influence how they vote in 2024.

Environmental protection and climate change

The climate crisis has led to the decline of natural resources, like salmon and fish habitats, which is impacting subsistence living throughout the state. Urgent government action is needed to provide Tribes with resources to repair damage to lands and waters.

Tribal sovereignty and self-determination

Threats to treaty rights, both legal and inherent, are increasing. Recent attempts to overturn the Indian Child Welfare Act (ICWA) and desecrate sacred places highlight the need to elect policymakers who will honor Tribal sovereignty and self-determination.

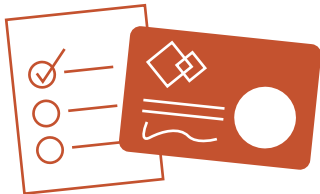

Mental health and substance use

High rates of suicide, drug addiction, and overdoses are disproportionately impacting Native communities. Chronic underfunding of Native healthcare has exacerbated the problem by limiting our communities' access to necessary mental health and substance use disorder services.

Our Vote Is Our Power

When Natives show up to the polls,
Indian Country is seen and heard.
Ensure you're registered to vote, and encourage your family, community, and Tribe to mobilize our collective power.

➤ Register to vote /
check your registration.

➤ Learn more about Alaska's key dates, regulations, and polling locations.

➤ Find out where candidates stand on the issues important to you and your community.

Alaska's Deadline for Voter Registration

Online, by mail,
or in-person:
October 6, 2024.

Learn more at NativesVote.com

IFS is a collaborative effort of IllumiNative and Native Organizers Alliance in partnership with Kauffman and Associates Incorporated

